YANKTON ROAD REVIVED

Looks More Like Business than for Some Time.

INTERESTED PARTIES IN THE CITY

W. W. Graham and J. S. Meekling Forming a Company to Complete the Road. The Former Now Owns the Grade and Asserts that the Line Will be Finished Before Cold Weather.

From Wednesday's Daily.

The Yankton and Norfolk railroad project seems to be reviving in a manner that would indicate that this time there is something beside wind behind it. The morning train from Sioux City today brought W. W. Graham of Norfolk, Ohio, J. S. Meekling of Chicago, and A. H. Orvis of Yankton. The first named is the man who bid in the grade of the Yankton road when it was sold under the hammer a few months ago. Mr. Meekling is an old time western railroad man who in 1872 completed the Dakota Southern from Sioux City to Yankton and a few years later the Sioux City and Pembina to Sioux Falls, both of which roads now form a part of the Milwaukee system. Mr. Orvis is a member of the law firm of French & Orvis, Yankton.

These gentlemen were seen shortly after they arrived in the city by a representative of The News, and they very frankly admitted that they came here to look over the ground in a preliminary way, for the purpose of building the road between Yankton and Norfolk which was started a number of years ago by J. T. M. Pierce. Tonight or tomorrow morning they will go to Pierce and from there will drive across the country, following the grade to Yankton.

Asked as to their plans, Mr. Graham said their business was first to pick up the ragged ends that had been dropped at the time the work was abandoned. Then they would be ready to incorporate a new company, and when this is done they have parties who stand ready to invest the money required to complete the road. The bonds of the new road have not yet been sold but the negotiations are all completed and they will be taken as soon as the promoters make their showing.

Mr. Graham said he had been working on the project constantly since the grade came into his possession. Already 45 of the 60 miles are graded and the bridges built, so that all that is to be done with that portion of the road is to lay the iron. Work on the remaining 15 miles of grade will be rushed when it is started. On account of the higher prices of material and labor, the completion of the road will cost more now than it would a few years ago, but never was a better time to build a road, as an abundance of money is seeking this kind of investment. The project contemplates the building of a bridge across the Missouri at Yankton, as the road without a bridge would be almost useless. At present prices of material the construction of the bridge will probably cost $400,000, while the cost of completing the road is estimated at $15,000 a mile. It is hoped by the promoters to have the preliminaries arranged within 60 days, and even by beginning at that late date it is believed the road and bridge can be completed before cold weather.

Mr. Graham said that he had had assurances from the business men of Norfolk that if the road would be completed, the same aid would be extended as was offered before. He wished to assure the people that there is no English myth behind the scheme now, and asserted that no aid would be asked until he and his colleagues are fully prepared to demonstrate that the road will be built.

The announcement that two men from Missouri will be here on the 17th to buy horses and mules, calls to mind the fact that horses and mules are again worth something. More than 60 members of the association were present, besides a number of the teachers in the city schools. After the reception of the new members, Miss Frances Johnson, president of the association, gave an address of welcome, which abounded in words of good cheer and hearty congratulations. The class of '99 was represented by Miss Anna McBride, who responded in a well worded address breathing words of satisfaction for what had been accomplished and hope for the aspirations of the future. The piano selections given by Miss Fannie Norton were appropriate and appreciated, after which refreshments of ice cream and cake were served.

The next hour was given up to social affairs, and then the association went into a business session, electing the following named officers for the ensuing year: Miss Nettie Nelson, president; Miss Anna McBride, vice president; Arthur Hazen, secretary-treasurer.
